

Granting BellSouth a DSL monopoly would not be good for consumers. It may be practical to have a monopoly on telephone wires, because it would be too expensive to have every competitor run its own wires, but it is in consumers' interest to confine the monopoly to transmission, not to allow it to extend to all possible services that may use the medium. I urge the FCC to deny BellSouth's petition.